

LE: I think a lot of us are just finally getting the platform to have our voices heard. To have our message out there because so many of us have been feeling these things and social media has given us an opportunity to see that other people feel the same way. That other people are having similar experiences, having similar thoughts, asking similar questions. Being able to respond to the way things have changed and things have changed so rapidly in the last year especially, but in the last 10 years. Having the platform to have your voice heard and being able to respond and show up with your full identity. And not have to necessarily censor yourself because you're using someone else's platform or you're having to conform to a certain environment, you can create your own environment. You can create your own community on social media. If I want to say something on my page, I don't have to ask anyone else's permission, but mine. I have the freedom to speak my mind as much as I want to, and a lot of us haven't been given that opportunity.